Whether candidates are expected to produce any evidence to show that they are British subjects ?	The candidates were not in the past expected to produce any evidence to show that they are British subjects but during the current academic year, in certain cases of doubt, certificates showing that the candidates are British subjects were obtained. The Principal of the College has since arranged that in future all candidates who apply for admission to the College should produce certificate of nativity.	Candidates are required to produce certificates of nativity.	Candidates are required to mention in their applications for admission the name of the district to which they belong and the name of the institution in which they last studied. No evidence beyond the candidates' own declaration is prescribed in proof of the candidates' nationality as British subjects.	The production of evidence to show that an applicant is a British subject is required only in case the Principal has reason to doubt the correctness of the applicants' statement.	....
